Colloquium lecture by Jun.-Prof. Dr Aleksandra Kaurin

(Intensive) Longitudinal perspectives on developmental psychopathology

In this talk, Jun.-Prof. Dr Aleksandra Kaurin will present her current empirical work on whether and how developmental psychopathology is best conceptualized in terms of social and emotional (dys)regulation. In doing so, she will discuss how relevant regulatory processes unfold over the course of moments, weeks and years, by focusing on three questions in particular: 1) How can we reliably assess trajectories of maturity and enhanced socio-emotional regulation from childhood to young adulthood? 2) How do social interactions affect the ways in which youth cope with stressful situations in daily life? And: 3) How can these processes be abstracted to transdiagnostically relevant traits such as social threat sensitivity? In answering these questions, she will discuss the unique benefits of ambulatory assessment methods in modeling clinically relevant everyday processes based on intensive longitudinal data.
